Here and There

—Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN—

WHILE listening Friday noon to the speeches of two state foresters before a Hope luncheon group urging Hempstead county timber owners to help the forest-fire control program, I thought of the sinister sight which was in plain view that very moment outside the hotel building. The sky looks cloudy—but not with rain. It is dust, a fine gray haze shot through with touches of yellow and pink—the very earth of the Great Far West blown to smithereens and scattered across a continent!

Years ago the American plateau—a prairie a mile above sea level—was covered with tough buffalo grass.

It was dry then, as always.

And the wind blew hard, as always.

But the tough grass held the earth together.

Man came along and plowed up the earth to grow his grain. The buffalo grass was destroyed.

Man's crops don't always turn out well. Sometimes a panic muddles his bookkeeping, and he forgets the earth and thinks only of himself. His friends may be left bare and untended—and then the wind comes along and tears loose the top-soil, ruining all agriculture for a century.

The buffalo grass made no money.

But it took care of the earth. That was the buffalo grass' business.

Men are forever starting things that they don't always finish.

And the tragedy is that when they find it to be a bad job they don't put things back as they found them, but simply walk off.

You can always find volunteers to go on a picnic and eat a lunch—but nobody want sto put away the trash and tidy up the picnic grove when luncheon is over.

And so it is with the natural resources that make a nation either wealthy or poor. Men cut down the forest, and use up the soil—but they are slow to think about putting anything back as they found it.

The dust haze over Hempstead county is ominous when you stop to think about it.

Once China was a rich and prosperous nation. But the Chinese cut the forests away from the mountain slopes. They impoverished the soil by failing to stop erosion, and by refusing to use fertilizer.

And so today drouth and flood and famine are China's lot—a once-rich gentleman in the family of nations now reduced to a pauper, a sad object of charity in the eyes of nations that were barbarian when China was civilized.

X X X

America grows older — but she doesn't want to be old as China is old.

She doesn't want to be a once-rich prodigal supported in her old age by the charity of foreigners.

America wants to grow old as the British and the French have grown old before her—an old age that is comfortable and respectable and secure.

She wants to take care of her forests and her soil.

Sometimes you don't feel so certain about America's future, considering that sharp politicians go about the land getting great armies of idle men to follow them with promises of sharing the wealth, or giving each man an automobile or a radio.

The thought of putting one's money into an automobile—whether earned or donated—at a time when a neighboring state's soil is being blown to kingdom come, is like inviting the lightning to strike us!

There is much to do today for the good of our country. It will take billions of dollars to do it—perhaps as much as all our wealth can stand, whoever happens to own or control

Wallace Flayed by Senators for Cotton Statement

Secretary Insists Processing Tax Required to Sustain AAA Program

A TREASURY RAID?

Senator George, of Georgia, Indignantly Answers This Charge

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Feeling between Secretary Wallace and some members of congress burst out on the senate floor Thursday when two Democratic senators bitterly assailed the cabinet officer, one of them declaring him "unfit" for his office. Wallace remained silent after conferring with associates.

Senator George of Georgia, whose farm amendment to the $4,880,000,000 relief bill was criticized by Wallace Wednesday, condemned cabinet members "who can say that amendment is an invitation to the farmers to 'get their hands into the Treasury.'"

Thomas of Oklahoma also charged that "farmers believe" Wallace is trying to keep the price of farm products down.

Later both senators said they had no thought of trying to oust Wallace from the cabinet, but that they believed he should not issue statements which would affect the level of farm prices.

George's relief bill amendment, which drew Wallace's ire, would permit the making of benefit payments out of the $4,000,000,000 works fund. Such payments are now provided by processing taxes, and George wants some of them lowered.

Senator Thomas, who said he and others had withheld their feelings until Thursday, predicted that Wallace's statement would result in defeat of pending AAA amendments to add new prdoucts to baic commodities on which processing taxes are now permitted.

Reads Press Statement

George started his comment by reading a published report quoting Wallace as saying George's relief bill amendment would permit farmers "to dip their hands into the United States Treasury."

"I do not wish to be understood as making an assault upon the administration," said George, "but I do wish to be understood as saying that any member of the cabinet who can say that amendment is an invitation to the farmers to 'get their hands into the Treasury of the United States' demonstrates to my mind his unfitness for a place in the cabinet. The statement is an irresponsible statement."

George said his amendment merely would give the president the power to use $100,000,000 of relief funds to remove processing taxes which prove burdensome.

Challenges Attitude

The Georgian challenged a statement attributed to Wallace that the cotton processing tax did not affect cotton consumption and that the tax was more likely to be raised than lowered.

The present tax, said George, amounts to a 40 per cent sales tax.

Relief Bill Delayed to Next Week

New Objection Is Brought to Light by Administration

Wallace Reported Pledged Against Increasing Cotton Processing Tax

GIANT WAR BUDGET

NRA Extension Bill Recommended—Also, Probe of Rail Financing

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Vigorous objection from administration officials bill Friday were reported to have de to the final form of the work relief layed further congressional action on the measure until next week in the hope that it can be modified.

Other capital developments included:

1. Representative Gifford, Massachusetts Republican, said he had been assured by Secretary Wallace that there was no immediate likelihood of an increase in the cotton processing tax.

2. The house sent the War Department appropriation bill to the White House for signature—the appropriation being one of the largest peacetime budgets ever provided.

3. Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee recommended a bill to extend the NRA along lines recommended by the administration.

4. The senate interstate commerce committee voted in favor of an investigation of railroad financing.

Agree on Relief Bill

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Striking down the Thomas silver inflation amendment, congressional conferees Thursday night broke a 48-hour deadlock and reached agreement on the president's $4,880,000,000 work relief bill.

The largest appropriation measure in national history emerged in a form sure to be approved by the president. Arrangements were made in advance to make possible final house action on the measure Friday. It will then be rushed to the senate.

Filibuster Averted

Despite previous threats of a filibuster in that branch by Senator Thomas, Democrat, Oklahoma, author of the silver inflation amendment, members of the silver bloc said they would not stand in the measure's path. Thomas said he would offer his plan later.

Quick approval thus appeared likely and there was a possibility that the bill might be carried by airplane so President Roosevelt could sign it into law while aboard the yacht Nourmahal. Once before he signed several bills while outside the United States, fishing on the high seas.

Plans for speeding the huge spending machine to be created under the bill already are virtually complete. But at the White House, earlier in the day, it was said Mr. Roosevelt would not disclose the set-up until the measure is finally approved.

Tax Publicity Repealed

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Reversing its position for income tax publicity the senate voted Thursday, 53 to 16, not to open the file of pink slips data to the public gaze.

However, a senate amendment to permit state and local tax officials to inspect the returns sent the measure back to the house, which had voted pink slip repeal.

An agreement seemed assured and officials said there was little doubt that President Roosevelt would sign the repealer, since the present law would permit him to make returns public at his discretion.

Ten Republicans and 43 Democrats voted to repeal the publicity law. La Follette was joined by five Republicans and 10 Democrats in opposing repeal.

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Democratic leaders, after applying pressure Thursday in an attempt to break up house ways and Means Committee opposition to features of the administration's social security program, reported success in sight Thursday night.

4th Liquor Store Permit Is Granted

Martin Pool Licensed in Hope—Total for Arkansas Is 176

Martin Pool of Hope, was granted a state retail liquor license permit Thursday, bringing the list of retail dealers in Hope to four.

Mayor R. A. Boyett said that Mr. Pool would be granted a city license Friday. He is expected to start operations immediately.

Three package liquor stores are already in operation here, permits having been granted to J. C. Porterfield, Jett Williams and Raymond Robins.

Thirty-four retail liquor dealers' permits were issued Thursday by Revenue Commissioner Earl Wiseman, bringing the total for Arkansas to 176.

C. B. Cox, of Prescott, was among the dealers to receive a permit Thursday.

First Christian to Hold Homecoming

All-Day Program Arranged by Local Church for Sunday

Homecoming will be observed Sunday at First Christian church at Hope.

A program has been arranged for the entire day, including sermons by the pastor, the Rev. Guy D. Holt, the Rev. J. Highsmith of Prescott, and the Rev. Lester Bickford of Gurdon.

The Rev. Mr. Holt will preach at 11 a. m. His subject will be: "The Untouched Cup." During the service hour, gifts will be presented to the oldest member present, and to the largest family present.

A fellowship meeting of the combined churches of Hope, Prescott and Gurdon, will be held at 2:30 p. m. The Rev. Highsmith of Prescott, will deliver a message to the congregation.

Regular vesper services at 5 p. m. will be in charge of the Young People's Bible class. The pastor, the Rev. Holt, will preach on "Youth Gone Mad." The Bible school is endeavoring to reach its goal of 150.

The public is invited to attend all services.

Forestry Program Here to Call for 2 Cents Per Acre

Campbell and Glass, of State Service, Address Rotary Club

HOW TO STOP FIRE

Fire Towers to Be Built Here to "Spot" Exact Location of Blaze

Plans of the State Forestry Commission to stop Arkansas' timber fire loss of 3 to 5 million dollars per year were outlined to Hope Rotary club Friday noon at Hotel Barlow by David Campbell, assistant state forester, and John F. Glass, No. 9 district ranger.

As previously announced, the state is setting up three fire-protection units converging upon the Hope territory, Units Nos. 6, 9, and 10, which will mean the construction of one or more fire towers in Hempstead county.

Mr. Glass told the luncheon club that the plan is this:

There will be no charge against farmers actually living on their acreage, for it is presumed that these will furnish manpower to fight their own fires.

But men who live in town, with timber acreage out in the county, will be expected to contribute 2 cents per acre. The federal government will match this with another 2 cents per acre—and then towers will be built, roads constructed, and the timberland patroled.

Of the 2-cent contribution, ½ cent will be set up as a special reserve against especially dry years when the fire hazard is greatest. Whatever part of this special ½-cent reserve fund remains unused will be credited back to the property owner, reducing the following year's 2-cent assessment.

How Fires Are Located

Mr. Glass described the cross-shooting method of locating a forest fire.

A towerman looks out over the timber with a telescope, spots a fire, then telephones the compass direction to the dispatcher. The dispatcher gets in touch with a second towerman, and when the latter has spotted the fire and furnished the dispatcher with a second compass reading, a little mathematics will locate the fire on the map exactly.

Fires 15 miles distance from a tower can be located within 50 yards' accuracy.

The dispatcher then sends a ranger out on the fire-fighting job.

Rebuilding the Forest

Mr. Campbell, assistant state forester, reporteld tArkansas' annual forest fire loss as between 3 and 5 million dollars—which the State Forestry Commission expects to stop with an investment of 200,000.

The state has no public funds for this purpose, so the co-operation of the landowners is required, and acreage is now being blocked for this purpose, Mr. Campbell said.

"Forestry is a business proposition," he said.

"The lumber business employs two-thirds of Arkansas' industrial workers. It supplies one-half of the industrial payroll, and wood products are 40 per cent of the total of manufactured articles in the state.

"Next to agriculture, lumbering is Arkansas' greatest business—but a business which is threatened because of the exploitation of forest reserves without ever replanting them, or conserving present reserves against the danger of fire.

Burns Every 10 Years

"Every acre in the state burns over on an average of once in 10 years.

"Our original reserves are about gone. There is only one million acres of virgin timberland.

"We are confronted with the problem of 21 million acres of cut-over land. It must be rehabilitated; a growing crop of timber must be put on it—otherwise taxes will continue to decline on this two-thirds of our land area, leaving the other one-third to bear an increasing share of the cost of government."

The lumber industry, Mr. Campbell said, justly bears some of the criticism for wilfull neglect—but the issue ultimately rests with an awakened public opinion. Only that can bring about rehabilitation of the forests—a business proposition in a state where timber grows twice as fast as in the Great Lakes Region, and three times as fast as in the Rocky Mountain country.

Coach Foy Hammons was introduced to the Rotary club Friday as a new member.

The program was presented by L. Carter Johnson, with Ed McCorkle presiding over the meeting.

A. B. Patten introduced a proposal to financially help the Boy Scouts of the city, the proposal being referred to the board of directors.

"Pony Express" Delivers Star in Red River Bottom Country

This Is the Story of Ray Sherman, Fulton Plantation Rider, and His Remote Newspaper Route

Hope Star has inaugurated a new rural system of newspaper delivery service.

It enables readers to obtain the newspaper each day without the direct facilities of railroads, automobiles, buses, or even rural mail carriers.

The new system has been designated "The Pony Express." Here's the way it works:

A bundle of newspapers is sent to Fulton each afternoon. At daybreak the next morning the papers are picked up by Ray Sherman, Fulton youth, and delivered to subscribers all over the Red River bottom area.

Sherman is employed by a large plantation owner at Fulton. He inspects many thousand of acres of farm land each day. He travels on horseback.

While making his daily rounds, Sherman built up a substantial list of readers, many of them living far from rural mail boxes.

If it were not for "The Pony Express" system, it would be impossible for many persons to receive a current issue of this newspaper—or any newspaper—as many of these subscribers live far from a rural route.

Sherman estimates that he travels 35 miles daily, over a countryside often impassable by automobile.

These readers are served daily. The subscription rate is 10 cents per week, delivered to the doorsteps.

Russia Satisfied With British Talk

Declares Political, Economic Outlook Is "Notably Improved"

MOSCOW, Russia—(AP)—Soviet circles said Friday after an hour and a half conference between Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet commisar for foreign affairs, and Captain Anthony Eden, British lord of the privy seal, that there was "a noted improvement in both political and economic relations between Soviet Russia and Great Britian."

Soviet sources did not indicate on what grounds the further improvement of Anglo-Russian relations was based.

During the discussions Eden has probed into the possibilities of peace for Europe.

France Prepares for War

PARIS, France — (AP) — The French government Thursday officially maintained silence on six demands Adolf Hitler reputedly made of visiting British statesmen Monday and Tuesday, but officials said privately any attempt to enforce them might mean war.

France appeared to have abandoned hope of achieving lasting peace with Germany and to be turning toward her old alliances.

The German demands, as published by European papers, included: Air parity with France, a 400,000-ton navy, repatriation of 2,500,000 Germans living in Czechoslovaki, annexation of part of that country, anschluss (union) with Austria and abolition of the Polish Corridor.

Await Stresa Meeting.

"Wait for Stresa" was the Foreign Office's official answer to questions. At that meeting April 11 France, Britain and Italy will give Hitler an answer, it was said.

In return for fulfillment of the demands, Germany is said to have agreed to join the League of Nations.

War was foreseen by officials if Hitler executes union with Austria or annexes part of Czechoslovakia. They recalled that Premier Mussolini mobilized and Yugoslavia was ready to do so when Austrian independence was believed threatened.

Little Entente spokesmen have said repeatedly an attempt to take any of their territory would bring an immediatet war.

French officals said the Berlin conferences opened the eyes of the British to the German menace to peace and they hoped that at Stresa Britain would join France and Italy in a policy of building a wall of protective alliances around Germany.

The French plan has been to organize Europe for peace through pacts either with Germany or without her.

LONDON, Eng.—The British government, facing decision of grave import at the tri-power Stresa conference April 11, Thursday night studied still another uropean security scheme in an effort to save something from the Anglo-German conversations as Berlin.

Authoritative sources said Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, failed to get Adolf Hitler's assent to fundamentals of the present security draft plan, worked out at Anglo-French discussions in London early in February.

An alternative arrangement, therefore, will be sought, it was stated, which, compromising differences between the Reich and other powers, may be presented to France and Italy at the Stresa conference.

Germany will not be present at that meeting. Sir John told the House of Commons.

The house, apparently convinced of the gravity of the present situation, did not press for more information.

Mississippi Hunts for Ray Hamilton

National Guard Called Out Following Bank Robbery and Terrorism

JACKSON, Miss.—(AP)—Augmented by national guardsmen, peace officers of south central Mississippi Friday strengthened their forces in a hunt for Raymond Hamilton, Southwestern badman believed to have been one of two robbers who Thursday looted the Bank of Bluntville at Prentiss and carried out a night campaign of tetror with shootings and kidnapings.

The desperadoes shot and slightly wounded two persons, one a woman, and kidnaped several other persons to use as shields against bullets from their pursuers.

All the kidnaped persons were released except two men.

Disarmed Posse

JACKSON, Miss. —(AP)— Two robbers, one tentatively identified as the Texas desperado, Raymond Hamilton, climaxed a reign of terror Thursday night by holding up and disarming a posse of 15 meen 12 miles north of Prentiss as Mississippi National Guardsmen were mobilized to hunt them down.

The pair started their mad dash through south Mississippi after robbing the Bank of Bluntville at Prentiss of $1,100 Thursday morning.

One woman was wounded, Sheriff Ennis Crawford of Covington county was reported shot slightly in a gun battle and many others were kidnaped.

The two men, streaking along country roads, surprised a posse of 15 men 12 miles north of Prentiss, took all their guns, kidnaped M. E. Smith, Jefferson Davis county farm agent, and forced him to drive them onward in his car.

Deputy Sheriff W. J. Lee of Jefferson Davis county said after a pistol battle with the men that one was Raymond Hamilton, the No. 1 desperado of the Southwest.

It was after the posse was disarmed that Jefferson Davis county requested Gov. Sennett Conner to mobilize militiamen. The governor instructetd Adjt. Gen. Thomas Grayson to call out the troops immediately.

Deputy Sheriff sLee aid Sheriff Crawford was "creased" in the head with a bullet when a party of officers and the robbers exchanged shots at a point between Prentiss and the spot where the posse was held up.

Ecarlier Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Rodney Polk of Prentiss was shot in the left arm when the desperadoes commandeered her automobile.

Economic and Monetary Reforms to Be Adopted Immediately

Belgian Investors Turn Money Away From Markets to Real Estate

BRUSSELLS, Belgium—(AP)—Premier Van Zeeland Friday proclaimed a "new deal" for Beligum, with the value of the gold belga cut "a maximum of 30 per cent" and with sweeping economic and monetary reforms to be rushed into effect.

Action Was Expected

BRUSSELS, Belgium. — (AP) — Belgium's new government cleared the way Thursday for announcement of its monetary policies, widely expected to include devaluation of the belga.

Premier Paul Van Zeeland's coalition cabinet, which this week replaced that headed by Georges Theunis, faced stiff opposition in parliament should it declare for devaluation.

A considerable bloc of legislators favors retaining the franc (the belga, the unit of exchange established in 1926, is equal to five paper francs) at its present gold value.

Long hours appeared in store for Parliament after its leaders decided to keep it continuously in session until the program is either arpproved or rejected. The two houses are expected to meet in joint session tomorrow.

A "black bourse" sprang up in Brussels streets after the closing of the exchanges and the prohibition of foreign exchange quotations during the three-day period.

The financial uncertainty was proving of value for real estate dealers, a record number rushing to invet idle funds in land and houses while others closed orders for construction which has been delayed.

Paris and London financial quarters agreed that the Belgian government's action in closing bourses apparently presages devaluation, which may enranger solidity of the gold bloc—those European nations still pegging their currency to the yellow metal.

Switzerland's position was regarded as precarious because of the reported flight of 100,000,000 Swiss francs during the last few days, and London quarters believed the Netherlands, France and Italy might follow if Switzerland abandoned gold.

Britain's chancellor of the exchequer, Neville Chamberlain, saw no hope, however, that the new developments would lead to international currency stabilization.

Fraternities Lose First Test Vote

First Count at Little Rock Is 112 for and 10 Against

LITTLE ROCK.—An almost unanimous vote in favor of abolishing fraternities and sororities in the Little Rock public schools was recorded by parents of West Side Junior High School students Thursday at the first of a series of meetings held at the request of the school board to determine whether the student groups will be suppressed or continued with faculty supervision.

Of the 122 parents voting, 112 were in favor of abolishing the fraternities and sororities and 10 favored control of the groups under faculty and P. T. A. supervision.

There are 1,050 students in the school, representing 750 families.

Markets

Cotton

NEW ORLEANS — (AP) — Cotton futures opened steadily Friday unchanged to three points higher, but quickly sold off and in the early trading losses of three to five points were registered in the active positions.

Rumblings of the Belgian monetary situation served to keep speculative sentiment in check and litle business was done.

May opened up three points at 10.96 and then dropped to 10.93, off three points from the previous close. After touching 11.00, July dropped back to 10.94. October at 10.49 and December at 10.61, represented similar price movements.

Liverpool came in worse than due and cables reported the market there was halding barely steady.

NEW YORK—(AP)—Cotton futures opened barely steady, one higher to five lower under foreign selling owing to the Belgian monetary situation. May 10.96; July 10.99; October 10.51; December 10.58; January 10.62; March 10.68.

Record Large Purchase Completed by Henry Watkins & Son

What is believed to be the largest single cotton purchase this season by any Hope cotton firm was completed Friday by Henry Watkins & Son.

A purchase of 1,020 bales from Japan Cotton company of Dallas, was made by the Hope firm. This supply of cotton was originally bought by the Dallas company from points in Arkansas and Louisiana.

Watkins & Son announced that the cotton would be shipped to mills in North and South Carolina.

THE NEW DEAL IN WASHINGTON

—BY RODNEY DUTCHER—

WASHINGTON.—Recent surface developments involving the White House and labor and NRA don't make sense to a lot of people—even here in Washington.

They're easier to understand if you look behind the scenes to see what the chief actors were doing—and realize the seriousness of the previously existing mess. White House gestures to labor were imperative.

It looked as if Congress were preparing to cut the Blue Eagle's throat. Both industry and labor largely desire NRA continuance, but the critics were howling loudest.

NRA was being investigated by a Senate finance committee almost utterly ignorant of its operation. The impression was widespread that Roos-

Distress After Eating Studied For Cure.

When a food disagrees with us, we usually find out about it and avoid that particular food. Recently investigators have been studying the question of distress after eating, with a view to determining foods that are most likely to cause such distress and the time when the disturbance comes on.

First, several people were taken who knew that they always had distress after eating certain foods. They were fed these foods and asked to note how long after eating the symptoms appeared.

In some cases the distress comes on while the person concerned still is at the table. In these cases the reaction is definitely one of sensitivity to the food concerned, in which case the person is likely to be very ill.

In other cases there is some other factor which is a sort of revulsion against the food. In studying these cases it was found that in some instances the nature of the food seemed to be unimportant, since there was no given time after digestion and absorption and since, in fact, anything put into the stomach, even water, produced discomfort, or pain, or heart burn, or belching.

It was found also that people who have distress immediately after a meal usually eat hurriedly and at times when they are tired out, exceedingly keyed up or especially annoyed.

"This is the disease of the mother who prepares the meal," says an investigator, "and then quarrels with her children or husband at the table; it is also the disease of business men and women who gulp down some food at a counter and rush back to work; and it is the disease of the president of a luncheon club; or of the traveling salesmanager who gives public talks at luncheons and dinners."

The mechanism of this kind of distress can be studied by the use of the X-ray. If the stomach is filled gradually and with repeated swallowing movements, its muscle fibers relax and the introduction of even large amounts of food does not greatly increase the pressure within the stomach.

If, however, the stomach is filled rapidly and without much swallowing, the muscle fibers do not relax and there is discomfort.

Investigators, years ago, showed that the mere idea of eating will usually cause the stomach to begin to get ready for the food by putting out the gastric juice. If food is taken hastily or in times of annoyance, this preliminary flow does not take place.

The investigators also point out that the reason why people who get indigestion after eating like to chew gum is because the repeated swallowing after the meal starts the waves going down the gastro-intestinal canal and stops the waves, in the reverse direction, which produce belching.

Don't Raise Beavers If You Value Peace—Grey Owl Tells of Hectic Life With Unusual Pets

Unless your wife doesn't care much about how the house looks, never take a beaver into your home as a pet. The little animal, will be a lot of fun, but he will disarrange your domestic arrangements from A to Z.

I gather this bit of knowledge from "Pilgrims of the Wild," by Grey Owl. Grey Owl is a member of the Ojibway tribe, half Indian and half Scotch.

A trapper for many years, he one day adopted two baby beavers and raised them in his cabin. He became so fond of them that he foreswore trapping forever, and now he is in charge of a beaver colony in one of Canada's great national parks.

His book is about as appealing a study of wild life as you will find anywhere.

Beavers, he says, are as affectionate as dogs, and a good deal smarter. They also raise considerable more hob with your house.

His beavers gnawed a hole in the floor and made a burrow under his bunk. They gnawed the legs off the kitchen table, eager to see what was on top. They gnawed their way through the walls, on occasion.

They would come from the lake, dripping wet and muddy, and crawl into bed with him. They ate his brooms and stole all his firewood. And with it all, they were so appealing and charming that he never minded the trouble they caused.

This book is really extraordinarily entertaining; and Grey Owl, incidentally, is an uncommonly talented sort of writer.

Published by Scribner's, the book sells for $3.50.

Mother Should Put Foot Down on Family Rows

Have you ever visited a family where the chief indoor sport was seeing who could be the meanest to the others? Where jealousy and hatred shoved all else out the door and took time out between bells only to get breath to go at it again?

Sister pitted against sister, brother against brother, sister against brother; parents, children—everybody mixed up in the daily battle of wits and tongues and tricks!

Some years ago I found myself in such a home, otherwise I would not have thought it possible among civilized people, nor would I have been able to credit what a mother described to me not long ago about similar condition sin her own house.

Her children were pretty well grown. Her husband, she explained, came home tired, nervous and irritable. She had had too much to do and so her own temper, she confessed, was none too elastic. She supposed that once she and her husband had been in love.

"But," she added, "we have been too busy and too worried to bother with that. I think husbands and wives get over that foolish softness about each other when they have so much on their minds. But it is the children that worry me. I can't go on with this perpetual quarreling and nastiness. I nearly go crazy. I tell them I'll run off and never come back. But they know I can't. What in the world can I do?"

I said I was terribly sorry but I did not think she could do anything magic. "Your children got their ideas of outdoing each other when they were little. That makes it hard to expect any kind of co-operation now. Of course, if I were in your place, I would say, 'Ladies and gentlemen, this is my house and my castle. You cannot ruin it for me. Behave and give me some peace or else get out and stay out.'"

"Yes, and then what?" she asked. "You can't let them starve."

"I have no doubt that you go right ahead and bake them pies and keep the tail end of the steak for yourself and was the girls' stockings and give the boys cigaret money and watch the ads for the latest styles for the whole kaboodle, while you haven't had the price of a wave yourself for months. Isn't that true?"

"Oh, I know I'm silly, but I have to do it," she confessed. "I try to keep everybody satisfied so there won't be more trouble."

"You have answered yourself, my dear lady," this indignant listener informed her. "While it is poor policy to resort to highhanded methods in any family circle, it is also quite permissible to keep one's sanity. You cannot stand it any longer, nor is it expected of you. Stop being Santa Claus and a doormat combined. Make those kids shut up and act like decent human beings in your house. Show some authority and spunk. They will respect you all the more.

"If you have to, feed them on bread and beans. And make them behave decently to each other. Make them. That's all—make them. But about that 'soft' business between you and your husband. Don't you think it would pay for you to start a new courtesy to each other? It is very contagious, this matter of niceness and consideration. Family co-operation usually begins with the attitude of parents to each other, to their neighbors and friends. In time very probably you will be able to stop the 'bread and beans' method with the children, figuratively speaking, for it won't be needed."

Now that Prince Mdivani is about to lose his bride, the Woolworth heiress, all that remains to comfort him is the memory of dimes they spent together.

The DARK BLOND

by CARLETON KENDRAKE ©1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MILLICENT GRAVES, secretary to GEORGE DRIMGOLD, finds her employer in his office dead. In panic she rushes away and registers at a hotel under an assumed name.

JARVIS HAPP, distinguished-looking stranger, recognizes Millicent and offers to help her. He sends her to a beauty parlor where she is transformed into a brunet. Happ takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. His son, NORMAN HAPP, warns Millicent against his stepbrother, ROBERT CAISE, and tells her a mysterious woman in black ermine has some power over his stepmother.

Millicent falls asleep. A noise wakens her and she finds a note under her door reading, "The woman in black ermine is here." Millicent dresses, sees the woman in black drive away in a sedan. Millicent follows in Robert Caise's coupe, but runs out of gas. She walks home, sees a light in the chauffeur's quarters, enters and screams.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XIV

AFTER that single involuntary scream had been wrung from her lips, Millicent realized the necessity for silence.

She could hear the pounding of her own heart, the steady dripping of the rain from the eaves, the rustle of the leaves of a shade tree which grew against the side of the building.

She stood there, listening, waiting to hear if her scream had attracted attention.

Apparently it had not. There was no sound save the noises of the night.

Millicent stepped into the room and closed the door.

She steeled herself to approach the figure which sprawled, face downward, in the center of the room. It was the figure of a man, clad in an overcoat with the collar turned up. A felt hat had fallen from his head and lay two or three feet to one side.

Millicent could not see the man's features, but she could see the dark, welling pool which seeped from beneath the figure and stained the rather thin, sun-bleached carpet of the room.

By exercising every bit of will power at her command, she leaned forward and placed her fingers on the man's wrist, trying to find if there was any pulse.

It needed only the touch of the flesh to convince her that the man was dead.

She straightened, knowing that she must get a look at his face. Somehow, she had convinced herself that it was, perhaps, Norman Happ who had followed the mysterious woman in black ermine. If this dead man should prove to be Norman Happ . . .

She moved slowly around to the side, so that she could stare down into the gray, distorted features.

The dead man was Harry Felding, the chauffeur, and his face was not a pleasant thing to see.

Millicent felt nausea gripping her. She pulled a handkerchief from the pocket of her fur coat, pressed it against her lips, stood for a moment swaying on the borderland between consciousness and fainting. Then she gradually regained control of herself. She wanted most desperately to get a drink of water, or perhaps there might be a bottle of brandy somewhere in the room.

SHE looked about her and saw a door which led to a bathroom. She entered the bathroom and saw that it contained a wash stand, over which was a drinking glass. There was a cupboard above the wash stand. She opened it, and her eyes encountered a flask of whisky.

Her hand shook as she splashed whisky into the tumbler and choked down a stiff drink, but, as the fiery liquid started coursing through her veins, it gave her new strength, a new feeling of confidence.

She wiped her lips with her handkerchief and returned it to the pocket of her fur coat. As she pushed the bit of linen and lace into the pocket, her fingers encountered a hard, bulky object which seemed strange to her. She frowned, explored the object with the tips of her fingers and then suddenly remembered what it was.

At the same moment a quick flash of inspiration swept over her and she pulled the object from her pocket. It was the key container that had been in the car she had borrowed.

There were seven or eight keys on that key container. Surely one of them must be a key to the house. With it she would be able to let herself into the house and go to her room without anyone knowing that she had been out.

She left the bathroom, stood in the square room once more with its windows on three sides, a room in which a man had recently met his death.

Suddenly, her brain clarified slightly by the stimulant she had taken, Millicent realized she would have to know something of what had happened. Had the man been stabbed or shot? Had he been killed by someone who lay in wait for him or had someone opened the door and struck him down?

Fearfully, she once more approached the corpse and stood over it.

She could see no hole in the back of the overcoat, nor was there any stain on the back of the coat to indicate that a bullet had gone through the man's body.

She leaned over to one side, looking to see if she could find any sign of a knife, and could find none. She noticed that the man had fallen forward away from the door. The wound was in the front. His assailant must, therefore, have been in the room at the time he had opened the door.

SHE went to the door, listened for a moment, then slipped out into the wet night.

As Millicent tip-toed down the stairs from the chauffeur's bed room she heard the sound of a motor car, and a moment later lights flashed along the driveway, showing that a car had turned in toward the garage.

For a second or two she stood there, wondering if she dared risk discovery. Then she ran down the stairs and concealed herself behind an ornamental hedge.

She had no sooner dropped from sight than the headlights of the automobile sent twin pencils of white brilliance against the hedge. They swung past Millicent, then swept back and came to a stop.

Millicent had already undergone a terrific ordeal. Now crouching there with the white lights boring into the hedge and blinding her vision, she felt that she had endured more than was humanly possible. She wanted to rise up from behind the hedge, throw up her hands and scream. "All right, here I am. Go ahead and convict me of murder if you want to!"

It seemed inevitable that the driver of the car had discovered her and was deliberately torturing her as a cat tortures a mouse. By an effort, Millicent held herself motionless.

A moment later she heard the sound of the garage door sliding back. Then, after a moment, the merciless white glare of the headlights was removed from her face, and she heard the car move into the garage. Then the door once more slammed shut.

Millicent was trembling from head to foot. Had the driver of the car seen her? Had the headlights been left fastened upon her purposely so that she might realize her hiding place had been discovered? Or had it been merely one of those coincidences which happen so frequently in every-day life? She knew that the driver of the car had, of necessity, left the car in order to unlock the door of the garage. It was, of course, possible that the car had accidentally been left in such a position that the headlights were boring into the hedge at the exact spot where Millicent had chosen to hide. Even so, there was a strong possibility that the driver of the automobile had seen her crouching there.

MILLICENT waited about 15 minutes before she dared to approach the front door of the house. The rain had ceased now, but low, black clouds were drifting rapidly across the sky, twisting and writhing on the wings of a wind which was momentarily increasing in violence in the higher regions, although it still blew only in gusts on the ground.

Millicent tip-toed up the stairs to the porch, took out the key container and fitted keys one after another to the front door. The fourth key slid the bolt back smoothly.

Millicent gave a sigh of relief, slipped into the corridor, closed the door behind her, took off her shoes and ran swiftly and silently up the stairs to her room. She took the key to her room from her pocket, opened the door, slipped inside, but did not switch on the lights. She closed and locked the door, then stood listening, trying to hear any sounds which might indicate her nocturnal excursion had attracted attention.

She heard nothing.

There was the first gray touch of dawn in the air, and Millicent, sliding wearily out of her wet clothes, bothered only to hang up her fur coat. Her other garments she let lie across the back of a chair. Then she crawled into bed.

Suddenly she thought of the suitcase of books on which she was to work. She decided that she would put them in the closet and lock the closet door.

Millicent jumped from bed, crossed the room, turned on the lights and bent over the suitcase.

Abruptly she stiffened into rigid immobility, staring down at the suitcase with incredulous eyes.

She remembered the appearance of that suitcase — remembered particularly the straps which had held it shut.

This suitcase had no straps!

Someone had removed the suitcase and substituted another during her absence from the room.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Again It's Lilac Time in Boudoirs—With Return of Frilly Clothes, Old Scent Regains Its Popularity

Right now, when the air is getting balmy and your energy seems to be at a low ebb, a new perfume probably is just what you need to ward off spring fever. The scents you used during the winter are going to seem too heavy, so you might as well begin to shop around for lighter odors.

As a matter of fact, you may want to pick a perfumed cologne or toilet water for daytime, saving regular perfume for dress-up and evening occasions. Toilet waters are much more popular now that we have returned to soft, feminine clothes and rather elaborate coiffures. They seem to be very much in keeping with the present mode and a good many smart women are using them.

For instance, Helen Hayes, whose favorite flower is the lilac and who likes this scent best of all, uses a lilac lotion. And a good many others are learning to love the fresh odor of lilacs in their hair and on their skins.

Incidentally, there's a new lilac lotion on the market now. Quite inexpensive because it lasts a long time, it can be used not only on body and hair, but in the bath as well. You'll love it, particularly if you are an admirer of Victorian manners and styles.

Remember that a perfume and toilet water set is the perfect Easter gift. If you want to make some favorite friend doubly appreciative of your thoughtfulness, you have only to give her a small bottle of perfume and a large one of toilet water in any odor to match.

NEXT: Spring Beauty.

Seeing Things With a Child

Folk who pass life's marvels by
With never a raising of the eye,
May think there's nothing strange or now
Or beautiful in town to view.
Beset with heartaches or with cares
Or busy with your own affairs
'Tis possible you've grown inclined
To gaze at splendors, partly blind,
And think as duties stern you face
The world is dull and commonplace.
If this is now your point of view
You need a child to walk with you.
With Ohs! and Ahs! of real delight
And everywhere she looks around
Another miracle is found.
To her the world is beautiful
And never dismal, drab or dull.
She races here and races there
To find enchantments everywhere.
And oft unto yourself you'll say:
"Would I could walk the world this way
And always find and never tire
So much of beauty to admire.

The Womans Auxiliary of St. Mark's Episcopal church will meet at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. M. H. Barlow on North Hervey street.

Miss Mary Delia Carrigan of Hendrix college, Conway, arrived Thursday night to spend the spring holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Carrigan.

Mrs. Teddy Jones has returned from a visit in Pine Bluff.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Breed have returned from Hot Springs where they were called on account of the passing of Herbert Allen, son of Mrs. Lenna Allen and the late Oscar Allen, former residents of Hope. Herbert Allen who was in his twenty-seventh year attended school in this city, and his friends will deeply regret his passing. Funeral services will be held from the family home in Hot Springs, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The Womans Christian Temperance Union held a most inspiring meeting on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Henry H. Stuart, West Avenue C with Mrs. T. R. King as joint hostess. The rooms were bright and attractive with spring flowers, and the meeting opened with the singing of "America" by the Union. A devotional stressing our responsibility toward the youth was given by Mrs. A. C. Kolb, who founded her remarks on the 22nd chapter of Matthew. Mrs. Edwin Dossett, the newly elected president conducted a short business period at which time, the new officers were named by Mrs. Stuart as follows: President, Mrs. Edwin Dossett; vice president, Mrs. A. C. Kolb; secretary, Mrs. D. G. Richards; treasurer, Mrs. Ida Boyett. The regular routine of business was dispatched, after which Mrs. Stuart announced her program as follows: Violin selection, "Humoresque" by Peyton Kolb, followed by a paper entitled "What Is Alcohol" by Mrs. T. R. King. Mrs. Edwin Dossett gave a splendid article on "Your Manhood and Alcohol." The program closed with Miss Mamie Twitchell reading an article, aptly named, "A Letter From Satan." The meeting closed with the Aaronic Benediction. During a short social hour, the hostesses served a delightful ice course with cookies.

Misses Marguerite Taylor and Elizabeth White were Friday visitors in Shreveport, La.

Mrs. R. M. LaGrone has returned from Russellville where she attended a meeting of the State Federation of Music clubs. Tribute to Crosnoe by U. S. Engineers

Memphis Office of Army Engineers Mourns Loss of Hope Citizen

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—It is with deep regret that the district engineer announces the tragic death by drowning, while in performance of duty, of Clyde C. Crosnoe, assistant engineer, March 21, 1935, said an official announcement here Wednesday.

Born June 18, 1902, Clyde C. Crosnoe received a B. S. degree in Agricultural Engineering, Texas A. & M. College in 1923.

From 1923 to 1926 he was connected with the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Texas Highway Department. His first service in the Engineer Department began with his temporary appointment September, 1926, as Inspector, Revetment, and on Nov. 1, 1926, he was given probational appointment in the same position. He was promoted to Junior Engineer on Jan. 13, 1934. He had been Assistant in Charge of Bank Protection Party No. 7 since June 1, 1934.

Mr. Crosnoe's service was characterized by his conscientious performance of his duties and by his ability, energy and good judgment. He possessed the rare quality of leadership to a marked degree. His loyalty to the service, his superiors, associates, and subordinates was of the highest quality. His place in the Engineer Department will be difficult to fill.

He will be missed by his associates and friends.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

Text: I Peter 5:6-11; I Peter 3:14-18
The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for March 31.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

All the 12 lessons of this quarter have centered around the life and teaching of Peter. Peter offers a rich and fruitful study of the nature of the Chritsian life with all its hopes and aspirations, with its weaknesses and failures, and its emergence to triumph through the saving power of God.

Our lessons begin with Peter's conversion and call. We must put together various passages of scripture if we would get the full story, and even then we have only glimpses of it.

From one account we might imagine that Jesus came as a complete stranger where Peter was by the Sea of Galilee mending his nets, and that in the very moment of Jesus' call he left his nets and followed Jesus. The story as it is given in the first chapter of John, however, adds a great deal to that and explains it.

There we have the record of Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, meeting Jesus and becoming so impressed with his truth and teaching that he goes and finds Peter and brings him to Jesus. It is probable that Peter may have had a number of such contacts with Jesus before the final call in response to which he left his nets.

Discernment of the greatness of the Master, to whom Peter gave himself, was early acknowledged in his great confession. Jesus was indeed for Peter the Christ, or the Messiah, the Son of God.

Such a recognition and such a relationship might well have enlarged Peter's vision and so strengthened his will that he would have been secure against the temptation. Yet we find him so lacking in the simplicities of love in human relationships that Jesus must give him a lesson in humble service, and we also find him denying his Master in the most flagrant way.

It was well for Peter that there was a love of God that followed him in spite of his weakness, and that restored him to a place in faith and discipleship. With this restoration came a new Peter doing his part in the founding of the Christian church as he preached at Pentecost when many were saved.

Henceforth in the lessons of the quarter, we are face to face with Peter's teaching and example as a faithful servant of Jesus Christ. We listen to him as he laid emphasis upon good citizenship and the disciplines of the Christian life.

We are with him as he healed the lame man at the gate of the temple, and we discern him as he unmasks falsehood and hypocrisy in the early church, dealing with those who profess to give to God what they actually withhold, and with those who would buy the gift of grace.

We see Peter saved from narrow religious and racial prejudice, preaching to the Gentiles. We follow him in his miraculous deliverance from prison, and in the final lesson we listen to the flowering of his teaching concerning practical living as he describes, partly in his own terms and partly in language derived from the Jewish scriptures, the nature and reality of the Christian life.

It has been a quarter's lessons concerning vita ltruths centered in a remarkable personality—a man of impetuous zeal, crucial weakness, and of God-given strength of achievement.

The New Deal

evelt really wanted to give NRA a decent burial. Reports came in of manufacturers curtailing production so they might make higher profits through lower costs after expiration of NIRA June 16.

The NRA organization was badly demoralized and its administrative board, the National Industrial Recovery Board, was threatening to disintegrate through resignation of four of its five members.

Roosevelt needed articulate, solid support for NRA—from labor as well as industry. Experience had taught that it wasn't wise to have an industrialist at the organization's head, such as retiring Chairman Clay Williams of NIRB.

Big Man Needed

The job required a big figure, acceptable to both industry and labor, whose appointment would be evidence to congress and the country of Roosevelt's determination to continue NRA who could reinject life into NRA while strengthening the administration's legislative position.

With this in mind, Roosevelt decided on Donald Richberg, his "assistant president."

But Richberg had become anathema to organized labor. John L. Lewis, was attacking Richberg publicly and violently—with tacit support from other leaders.

Richberg's attitude on collective bargaining had infuriated labor and it had been Richberg who several months before had blocked efforts by Secretary Perkins to give labor equal representation with industry on NIRB.

Labor opposition was seriously impairing Richberg's effectiveness as F. D.'s right-hand man and seemed sure to be a factor in his resignation sooner or later.

Don Takes It on Chin

It was also becoming a serious political liability to the administration and adding to Roosevelt's third party worries. And it was a distinct handicap in the face of strike threats of various importance in coal, textile, steel, tire, and automobile industries.

So Richberg, who has limitless capacity for taking it on the chin while standing as a buffer for the president, went out and took it on the chin.

As Daniel entering the den, he invited himself to a meeting of the NRA Labor Advisory Board to plead for labor support for NRA. The laborites mauled him for four hours.

To all of which Rickberg replied meekly with soft answers.

Hillman Saves Day

Thereafter, Sidney Hillman of NIRB and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers entered the picture as a conciliator and chief fixer. He hadn't attended the LAB meeting. Being an intelligent labor leader, he is respected at the White House as well as by Lewis and President Bill Green of the A. F. of L.

He had conferences with Richberg and Roosevelt and with Lewis and Green until everyone understood what each side wanted and what each would accept.

The labor leaders promised to stop batting Richberg on the head, to cooperate with him as NRA chief, and to come out strong for support of NRA.

Labor Gets Concessions

In return, they received: 1. Equal representation with industry on NIRB through appointment of Phil Murray of the miners' union—which was equivalent to appointment of Lewis, Richberg's severest critic. 2. Assurances of friendship to labor and what could at least be interpreted as a sympathetic attitude toward the Wagner labor disputes bill—reflected by Richberg's subsequent assurance that he supported the Wagner bill "in principle."

Thriugh the arrangement, labor will also have the continued NIRB services of Hillman, who had resigned partly in disgust and partly in a desire to pay more attention to his own union.

Richberg meanwhile nurses the White Hous - A. F. of L. approachement tenderly. Asked to give his current interpretation of NIRA's Section 7-a (his previous interpretations had led to the estrangement), he replied with a wry smile:

"I don't interpret it any more."

New Objection Is

with taxes for old age benefits and unemployment insurance was delayed. Committee leaders predicted that the bill would not be ready for formal reporting to the house before Tuesday or Wednesday.

The situation was so involved that it was talked over with Speaker Byrns, who said afterward that "everything will be all right." It led, also, to a secret meeting by Democratic members of the committee, at which the controverted points were discussed at length.

Fail to Ballot

The Democrats, called into meeting to bind themselves in committee to vote as a unit, did not reach the balloting stage. It was indicated that further discussions would be held.

The problem revolved around the nine per cent taxes the bill would levy on pay roll. For unemployment insurance, the bill would tax pay rolls one per cent beginning January 1, 1936, and increasing to three per cent January 1, 1938. All this tax would be paid by the employer.

For old age assurance, the bill would tax pay rolls two per cent beginning January 1, 1937. This tax, half paid by the employer and half by the employe, would increase one per cent each three years to six per cent in 1949.

Object to Taxes

Although the Treasury estimated that these taxes would be necessary to keep the system from causing a huge federal deficit, some committeemen were complaining—and with force—that such taxes would not be beneficial in a time of depression. These members sought either to eliminate, reduce, or postpone the effective date of the taxes.

Once, the committee voted, 13 to 11 against eliminating voluntary annuities for those not covered by the mandatory old age benefits. But the advocates of that move claimed to have "new information" and demanded a reconsideration. Democratic chiefs, worried about what might happen upon reconsideration, went to work, and today's meeting of the Democrats and the talk with Byrns were the results.

Princeton Star Held in Thefts

Princeton University was shocked when Frank B. John (above), football star and high ranking scholar, was arrested and jailed on a charge of looting student dormitories.

Who Cares?

The Hollywood magnate told an assistant that in his opinion a certain writer was the only man for a film they had under consideration. The assistant was tactfully doubtful.

"Don't you think, perhaps he's a little too caustic?" he suggested.

"Do I care how much he costs?" demanded the producer. "Get him!"—Montreal Daily Star.

Studio Jumps Gun With Year's Baby Stars

Even before the Wampas could realize it's 1935 and time for another selection of Baby Stars, Paramount, sore at the group of movie press agents for refusing to consider contract artists in their 1934 list, presents its own selection of promising newcomers. And right at the top is Grace Bradley, her fiery hair and flaming personality marking her as another Clara Bow. Below are the other five Paramount choices. Left to right, they are: Wendy Barrie, Ann Sheridan, Gail Patrick, Gertrude Michael, and Katherine DeMille.

Davey Hits Back in Relief Fight

Fighting back in a bitter battle that echoes across the nation and may have vital effect on the next presidential campaign, Gov. Martin L. Davey is shown here addressing the Ohio legislature, upholding his own course in the relief strife raging between the state and federal governments. Davey centered his fire on Harry Hopkins, who had accused the governor's aides of "shakedowns."

Sterilization Is Urged, Criticized

Opposing Views of Medical and Catholic Authorities Are Aired

LITTLE ROCK—Medical and clerical opinions on proposed sterilization of habitual criminals and the feeble minded by the state were expressed at the Woman's City Club by Dr. L. R. Brown, former superintendent of the State hospital, and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Albert L. Fletcher, vicar general of the Catholic Diocese of Little Rock, at the public welfare forum of the Little Rock Federation of Women's clubs Thursday.

"The motive which prompts those who advocate a law for the sterilization of habitual criminals as a means of reducing the number of future criminals is certainly a worthy one but the proposed measure for accomplishing this end is impracticable and inadequate," Father Fletcher said.

"The meagerness of the present knowledge of heredity, and the belief that environment has been known to produce fully as many criminals as heredity, were discussed by Father Fletcher as arguments against sterilization, aside from "moral reasons which might be mentioned."

Need for "careful, conservative and scientific" enforcement of such a measure was emphasized by Dr. Brown who pointed out "economic reasons why it is of benefit."

"Something must be done to stop the increase in the feeble minded," Dr. Brown said. "The number of those at the State hospital has more than doubled since 1923. It comes down to an economic reason—and sterilization of the feeble minded would immeasurably relieve economic conditions in 25 years, if started now."

Texarkana Boy on Lost Naval Plane

Lieut. Edwin G. Kelly Pilot of Bomber That Plunged Into Pacific

LOS ANGLES, Calif.—(AP)—The United States fleet, its sensational secret tactical exercises completed, moved back to Los Angeles and San Diego bases Thursday night minus a bombing plane that fell into the sea with the loss of two lives.

During simulated night bombing operations one of the bombing planes of the aircraft carrier Lexington plunged into the ocean 20 miles north of San Diego, drowning Lieut. Edwin G. Kelly, pilot, and Aviation Machinist Mate R. Carillo, both of San Diego.

Destroyers were the first to reach the scene. Bits of wreckage were found on the water, indicating the big bomber apparently dived into the ocean under power and cracked up, the engine and fuselage sinking and carrying down the fliers. No trace of the bodies were found.

Kelly, 27, was born in Longview, Texas, was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1930, received aviation training at the Pensacola (Fla.) station, and was assigned to the Lexington in Juily, 1934. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Virginia Kelly, of San Dego. His parents were listed in 1930 as residents of Texarkana, Texas.

ried her for several miles but denied they had anything to do with her death.

"We let her out," they said, "and she lay down on the pavement and fell asleep."

Meanwhile a coroner's jury was continuing investigation and is expected to render a verdict Friday.

Reed Norman, of Homer and formerly of Magnolia, identified the body as that of the former Miss Roberta Williamson. Notified of the death, Sheriff M. J. McCollum of Magnolia, communicated with the woman's brother, Iris Williamson.

Williamson said his sister left home Wednesday to hitch hike to Tyler, Texas, where her husband is said to be in jail, in an effort to obtain his release.

In the Tyler jail, James E. Ferguson, about 32, who Deputy Sheriff Parker said was held on an automobile theft charge, said his wife resides near Magnolia and that her maiden name was Roberta Williamson.

Her third husband went into the discard as Jean Harlow, platinum pet of the screen, sat in Los Angeles court with her mother, Mrs. Marina Bello, as shown here, and was granted a decree from Hal Rosson, cameraman whom she married Sept. 13, 1933. Nelson Huckins' Safe Is Cracked

Texarkana Laundry Office and Coca Cola Plant Are Robbed

TEXARKANA—Burglars looted one safe in Texarkana Wednesday night and almost succeeded in ransacking another, being surprised in the act by an officer and fleeing without tools or hat.

The safe at Nelson-Huckins laundry was entered, the knob being knocked off with a heavy instrument, and the contents of the vault emptied over the floor.

The offender evidently took his time about it, for there were evidences of a careful search through the miscellaneous contents of the safe.

Police Officer Homer Williams, Patrolling the territory at Front and Texas avenue, surprised a safe-cracker in the office of the Coca-Cola company, the man fleeing into an adjoining dark room before the officer coul make any atempt to cover him.

Williams fired to summon aid, and Officers McCall, Locom and Deputy Sheriff Harry Monsarrat went to his assistance. A thorough search of the premises was made, which resulted in the belief the man had escaped through a garage door at the rear of the plant w hich was found open.

Gambling Trust in Kingfish's Hands

Long Reported Getting $26,000 Weekly Out of New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS, La.—All gambling in New Orleans and vicinity is passing under the control of a political monopoly composed of five of Senator Huey P. Long's closest affiliates in his state machine, it was revealed Thursday.

The gambling and political trust will license, so to speak, some 500 places in metropolitan New Orleans for the operation of racing handbooks and lotteries, and other forms of gambling usually associated with these, such as faro, roulette and dice. These 500 establishments, thus free from police interference, will pay, it was said, $5 per week each or a total of $26,000 weekly to the syndicate of Long's leaders.

All other places where any type of gambling may be found, will be promptly raided by New Orleans police, if in the city proper, or by state police, widely known as Long's Cossacks, if in the area outside the city limits.

Through legislation recently adopted by his legislature, Long is taking full control of the New Orleans police force. All higher polite officials, including the superintendent, have deserted the old regular or Mayor T Semmes Walmsley's Democratic faction in New Orleans, to align themselves with Long.

The gambling monopoly will be linked with political patronage, since only persons known to be of undiluted loyalty to Senator Long will be permitted to operate the licensed gambling houses or to be employed in them. All employes in each gambling place will be selected by the syndicate and as in the case of state hospital boards and agencies now controlled by the Long political machine, only men capable of controlling five or more votes each, through their families or immediate relatives, stand a chance of landing the jobs. Thus thousands of new votes will be controlled for Long.

That large gambling operators have had assurance as to where they stand seems a certainty, since new and palatial establishments have been opened up the last fe wdays, and others are being prepared. Many thousands of dollars are being expended. In St. Bernard and Jefferson parishes, adjacent to New Orleans and both controlled by Long, all resorts are wide open.

Loses First Court Round

NEW ORLEANS, La.—(AP)—The state administration, managed by Senaotr Huey P. Long, lost the first skirmish Thursday in the legal attempt of the city of New Orleans to prevent the Long political machine from taking control of city police and firemen.

After two days of sharp arguments, Judge Hugh C. Cage in Civil District Court issued writs of preliminary injunction restraining Long's newly-created police and fire boards from dispossessing the old boards operating under Long's political enemy, Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley.

Strike Club Held Over Wagner Bill

Union Labor Threatens Action in Auto Factories to Force Passage

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Threats of automobile and rubber strikes were renewed Thursday while the NRA sought to ward off a walk-out of 400,000 soft coal miners next Monday.

Francis J. Dillon, American Federation of Labor organizer, told the house labor committee that workers in both the automobile and rubber industries would strike unless congress enacted the Wagner labor disputes bill or a similar measure.

Discussing condtions in the Detroit plants, Dillon called Henry Ford "the biggest fake in America and the most over-rated man."

Describing the Detroit manufacturer as the nation's largest employer, he termed him also "the most unscrupulous." To this Representative Lesinski, Democrat, Michigan, interpected "and the most cruel." The interchange was not expanded.

36,000 Killed on Roads Last Year

Million Injured, Roy Anderson Tells Crowd at Esso Safety Cruiser

The Health of 36,000 persons and injury to nearly 1,000,000 on the streets and highways of the United States last year is a potent argument for practicing safety-first methods, Alderman Roy Anderson told a street audience gathered around the Esso Safety Cruiser at Hope city hall Thursday night.

Mr. Anderson was official spokesman for the City of Hope, welcoming the safety demonstration which is being put on around the country by the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana.

Mr. Anderson said:

"Because street and highway safety is a problem that intimately concerns every resident of Hope, I feel that I, in my capacity as a public official can heartily and fully endorse the efforts of the Esso Marketers in sending the Esso Cruiser on this Safety Tour of Arkansas.

Hope, like practically every city and town in the United States, has a traffic and safety problem that is of great concern to every man, woman and child, in the community.

"This problem of street and highway safety is one that costs thousands and thousands of lives every year, as well as one that consumes an untold army of dollars that might well be directed into more pleasant channels. Available statistics show that during 1934 in the United States there were 36,000 persons killed and 954,000 injured in automobile accidents.

"Expressed in other terms; 100 persons are being killed and 2,500 injured every day as part of the price the country pays for speedy and convenient transportation. This is to say nothing of the suffering experienced by those injured, nad the grief that comes to those who lose loved ones so needlessly. To you fathers and mothers, that you may better realize the magnitude of the automobile accident hazard, I give you these figures based strictly on facts of the present situation: In a family of three children, the probability is that one of these children, in the course of his life, will be killed or injured in an automobile accident.

"What is the reason for all this? It is probably due in large measure to the fact that in motorist versus pedestrian, and motorist versus motorist, we rely too hopefully and completely on the other fellow's conducting himself along safe lines. Probably no one thing will remedy this situation. I firmly believe, however, that a marked improvement will be shown if each of us motorist and pedestrian take just a little extra time to be safe. A few seconds at a stop light; a short pause before stepping off the curb; These will cut down on accidents. The various departments of your local government are making an united effort to prevent accidents and to make our streets safe. However, no amount of effort on our part can hope to succeed without the full co-operation of the people who operate automobiles.

Before we can be safe, we must be safe conscious, and I sincerely trust that the visit of this beautiful and unusual Esso Cruiser to Hope, will magke all of us more deeply conscious of our responsibility to drive carefully at all times."

Erskine Johnson, NEA Service staff correspondent covering the three major league clubs training on the Pacific Coast—Pirates, Cubs, and White Sox—has been shooting in some interesting personality stuff he has gathered in the camps there. And from here on you're going to read what that Los Angeles sports scribe has to divulge:

Rain, not a few drops, but barrels of it, has played havoc with the spring training programs of the three major league clubs here in "sunny" California.

Chagrined the most are officials of the Pittsburgh club, who switched from Paso Robles to San Bernardino this spring. In 11 years at the former city, involving about 200 days, the Bucs lost but three days on account of inclement weather.

(Ed. Note: Of course, that rain is "unusual.")

Gabby Hartnett, Chicago Cub catcher, seems to be the only victim of the dampness. He turned up with a sore throat at Catalina Island, and hardly could speak above a whisper for days. That was a bitter pill for Hartnett to swallow, for when the gabby one can't articulate, he is as much out of his element as a musk ox ni the Sahara Desert.

Fodder of the Finest

Your old fly-ball juggling friend, Babe Herman, says the Pirate training camp at San Bernardino is the best equipped of any in which he ever has trained.

"The food is the best I've evereaten," the former Cub and Brooklyn gardener goes on to explain.

Observers are watching with interest the comeback of Frank Demaree, again with the Cubs.

The youngster, champion hitter of the Coast League in 1933, after being returned to Los Angeles for seasoning by the Cubs last spring, blamed his failure to hit in the majors on the Cub's attempt to change his batting stance.

At Los Angeles he was permitted to hit his natural style, and he smacked everything pitchers in the circuit had to offer. This year the Cubs aren't going to interfere with his style, and the 24-year-old outfielder is sure he'll stick.

Just Like Hoe

A big poker game was under way in the card room at Hotel St. Catherine, eating and sleeping place for the Cubs at Catalina Island. At the table were Billy Jurges, sleek-haired shortstop; Chuck Klein, hard-hitting outfielder; Tex Carleton, pitcher acquired from St. Louis; Freddie Lindstrom, late of Pittsburgh; John Seysvice president of the Cubs, and Boo Weber, secretary and treasurer.

As the game progressed, Manager Charley Grimm and Pitchers Lon Warneke and Larry French congregated behind Carleton's seat.

A wit on the scene remarked:

"Well, you can send that Carleton back from St. Louis. The Cubs is giving him personal attention already."

Lindy Problem Third

Manager Grimm is counting on Freddie Lindstrom to play third base for the Cubs this year, but a lot of the experts say it can't be done—switching an outfielder into the infield.

They point out that Lindstrom's outfield career with the Giants and Pittsburgh makes him fit to get down on the ball well enough to be an infielder.

His Bonus Bill Up to Senate

When the House passed the Patman soldier bonus bill by the scant margin of three votes, it was the third time Representative Wright Patman (Dem., Tex.) had seen his measure approved by his colleagues. In slightly different form, his bill passed the House in 1932 and 1934 only to be killed in the Senate. Here is Congressman Patman in a new picture.

Jealous Husband Shoots Down Wife

Domestic Tragedy Caused by Ride Home From Cafe With Another

NEWPORT, Ark.—Jealousy was the motive for a murder and suicide Wednesday afternoon, officers said, when Robert Kenney, 25, shot and fatally wounded his attractive wife, Mrs. Ruth Davis Kenney, 23, waitress in a downtown restaurant and supporter of the family. Officers said Kenney came to Newport from Brinkley, where he married Mrs. Kenney five years ago.

He was a graduate of Brinkley High School and member of the football team there. He worked his way through high school and bore a good reputation, they said. Since the couple came here about three years ago his wife had been employed at various restaurants and was a hard worker. Her reputation was good.

Wednesday morning she obtained a ride home from the restaurant where she had been employed during the night, and was gone when Kenney arrived at the restaurant to accompany her home. Arriving at their four-room bungalow where her mother lived with them, Mrs. Kenney washed clothing for their two children, Bobby Lee, three, and Janice, one. She then went to bed.

At noon Kenney entered the home and asked his mother-in-law, Mrs. L. E. Davis to go to the FERA sewing room where she was employed. Shortly after reaching the sewing room Mrs. Davis was notified of the tragedy. Arriving at the hospital she found her daughter seriously wounded. Her left arm was shot off at the shoulder and the right arm at the elbow. A hole had been shot in the back of the head. Kenney lay dying at the home. The children were playing in the yard at the time of the tragedy.

The cork tree is stripped of its valuable outer bark, always during the summer, at intervals of about eight or nine years.

CONSTIPATION TROUBLES
Thedford's Black-Draught is made of the dried, ground-up leaves and roots of plants that act on the bowels when they are sluggish and constipated. For refreshing relief when you need a laxative, take this dependable, purely vegetable medicine.
"I was almost down; was bloated, and had gas pains until I was in a bad fix," writes Mr. J. W. Dillard, of Jonesboro, Ark. "I had heard so much about Black-Draught, I wanted to try it. I began taking small doses after meals. I found it was helping me. I have regulated my bowels."
